It strengthens our relationships with those who are playing with us. It doesn't make you stronger, bring in food, or help with reproduction, so there seems to be little biological advantage for those species that engage in play while avoiding the surv I was not aware of a National Institute of Play, but it sounds like a good idea.

This book explains how play is essential to all living things, and how it teaches life lessons and skills. DNA confirms a weird Greenland whale was a narwhal-beluga hybrid. I still think 40 hour work-weeks are too long, especially since most work-places make work very difficult to feel playful.
