The expression of grief, ; of fear, ; of hatred, A yet stronger reason for asserting that the subject is not postulated in perceiving an object, is, that the subject can itself become known only as an object. This must be admitted, whichever view be espoused respecting the nature of the ego. Nothingbutaconflictsoftwothoughtsthatcannotbeunited. In reality, Hume makes even more assumptions than Berkeley does. Now, if we strive rigorously to simplify the phenomena in either of these ways, we soon become aware of inadequacies in our method.
